a note of disappointment in her voice. "And dlda't you see me?" put in Miss Stewart opportunely.
"Well, girls," said Livingstone Haldaao, "how long are you going to keep up stopping here?" "I was about to suggest," said Misa

Stewart, "that Mr. Gormiy and I change places. I don't want to talk to you particularly; hut I know that Eleanor wants to speak to Mr. Gorm-7. and-" The words were not out of her wouth hefore Gormly had leaped to the street and opened the door. He assisted Miss Stewart to the place he had vacated, and took her place in the hig roomy tonneau. As soon as the exchange had been effected, liaidane started up the street again.

"I am sure now that I was aware of your presence, Miss Haidane," anid Cormly quietly. "And hecause of that I know that I never spoke better." "It was a great occasion," was the reply, "and great occasions make great speeches." "That and the consciousness-uncos-

"Leave it to me," said young flatdane. "I'll turn you up at your apartment in proper time and in good shape. Tonight you are going to en joy yourself and drop the campaign for a little while."

Gormly sank back in the fuxurious seat as the machine started onco more, with an expression of great retie had said he was tired. No wonder! The strain of three or four months' campaigning had been enough to test his nerve and vitality to the very limit. Ito had enjoyed no opportunity for relaxation. The pace had been too swift, the going too hard, for that. He had not dared to let up for a single moment. He would not have dared it then; but being caught up abducted as it were, he gave himself up unreservedly to the joy of the mo ment. To find himself flying through the city by the side of the woman he loved, so near that he could reach his hand out and touch her, if he possessed the right, was happiness enough.

There was only one cloud on his horizon, and that fay in some informatien confirmatory of a auspicion he had entertained ever since Christmas eve, which had come to bin tha afternoon. Our Magnificent Fall Millinery Opening

Takes Place Thursday and Friday, Sept. 22 and 23

YOU are invited to come and see this magnificent assemblage of unusually beautiful and stylish Millinery. The shapes—well, there's no describing them, but since they are to be, they are beautifully so, for the eye of the artist, the deft touch of the skillful has made them exquisitely becoming, where they would otherwise have been plainly the opposite. You must come and drink in their daintiness and see their loveliness. They are so chic, so smart, so attractive that you'll appreciate the see-ling of them. They are the prettiest styles of the new season, the smartest and most up to date models. For mar y years our millinery supremacy in Paducah has been unquestioned. This fall and winter you will find us still foremost in the business. Come and bring your friends.
